Religious Ed

Religious Education has begun. Classes are held every Wednesday at 7:00pm. If you have not registered, you may register before class in the school office. All children and youth are encouraged to attend. Don't forget, the Upper Room is open Sunday from 5:30-7:30 for all High School Students.

Parking lot monitors are still needed. If we do not get enough volunteers for parking lot and playground duty our children will not be able to use the playground before R.E. If you are interested, please contact Virginia Loza-Lee at sscmre@gmail.com or 512-859-2634. It only takes a couple of hours on Wednesday night. The more volunteers we get, the less times you have to monitor. This is a great ministry for grandparents and retired persons.

Message from Our Pastor ~Fr. Chris Ferrer

In today's gospel, Jesus teaches his followers how to correct fellow sinners among themselves, and He gives a basis for what we call excommunication. Sin, correction, forgiveness, reconciliation or excommunication all fall within the broader context of the spiritual relationship of believers to the Holy Trinity.

EXEGESIS:

In telling his disciples how to correct fellow Christians who sins hurt others, Jesus moves from the legal domain to the theological. First, Jesus says, admonish the sinner in private. Second, if the sinner is not receptive, call upon one or two witnesses to help correct him. Jesus here quotes the Jewish custom which required at least two witnesses, but He says "ONE or two." This was because it was still debatable among Jewish lawyers at that time as to whether more than one witness would be necessary; Jesus seems to favor using at least one. Third, if the sinner persists, call upon the church to correct him. This is one of only two uses of "church" in the gospels. The first was when Jesus told Peter, "I will build my Church upon you" ("Church" here meaning the general community). But here "church" means the local parish, so to speak. Fourth, if the sinner still refuses to change his ways, then treat him as a Gentile or tax collector (two kinds of people disdained by the good Jews). This amounts to a kind of excommunication by the local church.

Jesus roots the power of the local church to excommunicate in the power of binding and loosing (a legal term) which He gives to his followers. This is different from the power of the keys to heaven, which He gave only to Peter. He then comments on his presence and on the Father's reply to two or more disciples who gather to pray. This statement seems not to flow easily from what He previously said about correcting sinners. But as Jesus moves from the legal to the spiritual, or theological, He has set sin, forgiveness, and reconciliation within the context of personal relationship to the Holy Trinity.
